In fact, the reputation [33] of Dreyfus as a cold and withdrawn or even haughty character, as well as his "curiosity", worked strongly against. Whereupon this insolent being, who, doubtless, had a right to be insolent, sang an Italian trill, and went towards the window where Eugene was standing, moved thereto quite as much by a desire to see the student's face as by a wish to look out into the courtyard. Since the pastoral masque is a spectacle offered to the noble Emmeline, the mismatching between the rustic contents and the courtly origin of the dance music is more apparent to us than it would have been to a late 17 th century audience.
