To be useful, a bathometer or prototype must also have the following characteristics: It must be clear and possess a single focus, while being easy to read and interpret, so that it can supply unambiguous feedback; It must be resistant to whatever in its environment threatens to inhibit its functioning, in order to be able to supply the necessary feedback. Since then, behind the shield of limited liability, risky and irresponsible corporate practices have contributed to countless bankruptcies and financial crises - most recently the Financial Crash of Limited liability and corporation are twin nineteenth-century concepts. Every time without fail, it all starts .
