Biostatistical Methods: The Assessment of Relative Risks, Second Edition (Wiley Series in Probability and Statistics)

Then imagine enduring the scorching flame those sins have ignited, and doing so until you are ready to repent of them-ready to repent not for the pain of being made to recall them, as though the fire was merely a punitive measure meant to goad a vague sense of remorse, but ready to take responsibility for the counterfeit corpse these specific sins have molded, and thus prepared to consign every last one of their ghastly sinews to the outer darkness before replacing them each in turn with ligaments worthy of shining raiment. Kudryasheva L.

She can do anything a man can, and do it better, so she certainly doesn't need one in her life. Scheherazade must have been quite a woman to be able to not miss a night, and apparently deliver her babies without her husband noticing because at the end of the book the king seems to have not been previously aware of the existence of his children.
